POLITICS AND THE JEWS

In writing this editorial we are not departing from our established policy of non-interference in political matters. This journal is preeminently Jewish, and only matters of basic importance to the Jewish people can find their way into its columns. Our field is as limited as is the field of the medical journal or engineering journal. Canadian politics, while they are of interest to Jews, as Canadians, cannot be designated a specifically Jewish concern. And for this reason we cannot conscientiously deal with political issues be they never so important to the general public.

We deem it opportune, however, to bring out several facts with respect to Jewish participation in politics which should be of interest to those concerned in political matters. It is well to have it understood that the bulk of the Jewish electorate has no regard for the self-styled Jewish political leaders. Jewish life is full of difficulties and problems. The Jewish leader must be capable of understanding the peculiar character of Jewish existence. He must be a person capable of making great sacrifices on behalf of his people. The Jewish public is intelligent. It fully appreciates what it requires of its leaders, and the measure of response given by those who profess to be at the head of its affairs. It will not suffer itself to be guided by people who come to it with ulterior motives. Our politicians may succeed in gaining the ear of important men in the councils of the parties. They may convince the latter of their influence and prestige. They may as a matter of fact succeed in delivering a handful of votes. It is always possible for any person to obtain a following of sorts. But the Jewish public is in the main too well posted on political affairs and too conscientious to be treated as a marketable commodity. The only way to reach our Jewish electorate is by intelligent presentation of facts—by logical reasoning.

It must be understood that Canadian Jews love Canada as dearly as do any other class of people. Every human being has a capacity for loving. Give him a worthy object for loving and his emotion will be aroused. Settle a normal person in a given place. Let him become familiar with its attractions; let him look at its skies, listen to the music of its lakes and rivers, thrill at the majestic beauty of its mountains. Let him become enmeshed in the web of its economic fortunes. Let him feed his personality on the experiences afforded by the environment. He is bound to acquire a feeling of intimacy with this place. He is a part of it. He becomes identified with it. And we know that identification of the self with another object is the source and essence of love. Canadian Jews, as normal beings, experience the emotions of all normal beings. They are capable of loving. Canada is worthy of being loved. And they love Canada. They treat their relationship to their homeland seriously and with reverence. They scorn the petty creatures who presume to speak in their name and misrepresent their attitude towards the country's political problems.

It will also not be amiss to mention that the bulk of our Jewish citizens resent the effort on the part of some of our true leaders to exploit their deserved prestige in the Jewish world for political aggrandizement. The Jewish public is prepared to pay its full meed of homage and appreciation to the self-sacrificing members who bear the really onerous burden of leadership in various spheres of its concerns. In truth, the Jewish masses are often too gushing and hysterical in their recognition of merit. But it is not asking too much of these leaders to treat their appreciative followers with a certain measure of reciprocal respect. When the Jewish masses elevate a man to a pedestal in their communal life, they expect him to comport himself with taste and dignity. It is not edifying to the Jewish public to see their leaders go into the arena of political strife and barter their Jewish prestige for a bit of political preferment.

We may, we believe, justly say to our leaders that if they wish to be leaders in our philanthropic, cultural or Zionist endeavours they must respect their responsibility to their followers, and not make political capital of their prominence. They owe it to their organizations or movements, whose guidance and even fate lie in their hands, not to jeopardize their success by becoming embroiled in contentious issues.

Canada is now in the midst of an extraordinarily important political campaign. It behooves us as believers in democratic government to assume that the choice of the majority will necessarily be a wise one. We wish to reiterate with respect to the bearing of the campaign on the Jewish electorate that there are two things to remember. The Jewish public is too intelligent to be guided by the host of petty politicians who come to life during election campaigns. The Jewish public expects its leaders to have the good taste not to use their prestige to gain political advantage for themselves. The Jewish people are open to conviction. Facts and reason will win their goodwill.

JEWISH TURKS

One of the most noteworthy achievements of the League of Nations was the promulgation of the principle of minority rights, for certain countries where oppression of minority groups was the practice. Turkey was one country where the observance of the principle with respect to the Jewish population was insisted on by the League of Nations.

Now we read that a number of Jewish leaders in Turkey have got together and decided to renounce the advantages of this arrangement and to repose their faith in the goodwill of the Turkish government.

This looks very much like a case of a few so-called leaders seeking to curry favour with the Turkish government at the expense of the interests of their people. It is inconceivable that these individuals really believe that the fate of their people is safer in the hands of the Turkish government than in those of the representatives of the European powers. Further details will probably confirm the suspicion that the Turkish leaders betrayed their people to gain prestige with Turkish officials.

WORLD UNION OF JEWISH YOUTH

The Congress of the World Union of Jewish Youth, which was held last week in Paris, was the first of its kind, and was organized by the Paris society by that name. About 400 delegates, representing fourteen countries, were present, and greetings were received from the city officials of Paris, from the Grand Rabbi of France, Israel Levi, from former Premier Herriott, and from H. N. Bialik. Among the problems that were discussed at the Congress were the "numerus clausus," the participation of the youth in world peace, Zionism, and Jewish culture. The discussion on Zionism called forth some very heated arguments. Justin Godart, a French Senator, announced the creation of a Franco-Palestine Chamber of Commerce, the institution of a chair in Hebrew at the Sorbonne, and the creation of a French agricultural farm for future Chaluzim. The sentiment was very strong in favour of calling a World Congress of Jewish Youth at Jerusalem next Passover.

Al Feller is the only Jew on the faculty of the Rutgers University summer session. He is teaching the course in American Government.

Business Men's Council Trip

The Business Men's Council of Federation made its first annual trip to the various constituent societies in the Laurentian Mountains, Sunday, August 15, when a party of 200 members in forty automobiles went as far as Ste. Agathe. At the Montreal Hebrew Orphans' Summer Home at Shawbridge, they were met by the Boys' farm band under the musical director, Rollard.

A tour of the building and grounds with H. M. Levine, Moe Albert, Charles Fisher, Samuel Hart and D. M. Chorlton as Guides. Drinks were served.

Alderman Louis Rubenstein, S. Ross Vineberg and Lazarus Rubinstein were in charge of the sports day events. Leon H. Fischel, chairman of the Council, spoke at the reception in the assembly hall. In his reply, H. M. Levine paid a tribute to the Council, to Mrs. J. Greenberg, convener of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Home, M. Tannenbaum, lay religious leader, and the co-officers and staff for the high state of the home.

Dr. Baras extended an invitation to the children to use the opening first two weeks' vacation of 1927 at the new Boys' Camp at Lac l'Achigan. Walter R. Friedman and S. J. Rossen, superintendent of the Home, spoke.

The party's arrival at Mount Sinai Sanatorium was announced at 1.30 by Assistant Scoutmaster Max Sendel with a bugle blast. An open-air luncheon was served, with drinks and ices, through the courtesy of Louis Salomon and A. Bronfan.

A tour of the buildings was made under the guidance of Louis Salomon, president, J. N. Neumann and A. Bronfman, directors, and Dr. D. L. Mendel and Joseph L. Fox, manager. The visitors were shown the kitchen, the dining hall, recreation rooms, the synagogue, X-ray room, wards accommodating the fifty-three patients, and the outbuildings and vegetable gardens. Leon H. Fischel and Michael Hirsch, honorary presidents of Federation, spoke of the work of the Sanatorium. Michael Hirsch presented Louis Salomon, president of the Mount Sinai Sanatorium, with an engraved silver Ivoing cup. Walter R. Friedman spoke, inviting all to visit the Bnai Brith Camp and announcing that from there a call would be made on the Y.W.H.A. Welcome Camp at Lac Brulé.

A large cotton sign in blue lettering, "B.M.C. Welcome to Camp B.C.," was displayed at Camp Bnai Brith at Prefontaine, where Ben Raginsky, camp director, showed the guests around. S. Hopmeyer, president of Bnai Brith Lodge, presided, caling on J. Levinson, Sr., the oldest ex-officer of the lodge, to speak. S. Hopmeyer asked Michael Hirsch and Leon H. Fischel to lower the flag at half-mast prior to dedicating a tent to the memory of the late Rabbi Herbert J. Samuel. The dedication speech was made by Marcus M. Sperber, K.C. Mr. Sperber formally placed the insignia on the Herbert J. Samuel tent. Rev. Isaac de la Penha, of the Shearith Israel Congregation, then intoned the "Ail Moleh Rachmim" as a prayer in remembrance of Rabbi Samuel.

Horace R. Cohen, for the Business Men's Council, expressed the thanks of the Council to Bnai Brith. At the invitation of Moe Feldman, he asked the Council visitors on their way down to stop off at St. Jerome to see the summer quarters of the Montefiore Home, which, though unaffiliated, was co-operating with Federation. Ben Raginsky, on behalf of the boys at the camp, extended thanks to the Council.

On arrival at about 6.30 o'clock at the Young Women's Hebrew Association Welcome Camp at Lac Brulé, the party was shown through the camp by Mrs. D. H. Bernstein, the Y.W.H.A. organizer and camp director. Refreshments. Brief addresses of congratulations were made by J. Levinson, Sr., David Kirsch, I. Greenberg and J. Albert. A "vaudeville" programme of instrumental numbers and of songs, recitations, dances and sketches was presented by the campers. "The Eskimo Tragedy" was presented under the supervision of Camp Counselor Felice Vineberg. The "Class Rehearsal," a farce comedy, was given. The party started at 7.20 o'clock on the return journey. Organizers of this trip were Horace R. Cohen and Walter R. Friedman.

The Council is indebted to M. Inskey and E. S. Miller for acting as motorcycle guides, and J. C. E. Trudeau for providing a repair truck. Among those who went on the tour were: Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hirsch, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Levinson, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hart, Mr. and Mrs. David Kitsch, Mr. and Mrs. Leon H. Fischel, Mr. and Mrs. David Shapiro, Mr. and Mrs. B. Leavitt, Mr. and Mrs. S. Ross Vineberg, Mr. and Mrs. David Sperber, Mr. and Mrs. S. POPE CONDEMNS ANTI-SEMITISM

Mr. Aseldank, the founder of the Catholic Society of Friends of Israel, was received in audience by the Pope. The Pope assured Mr. Aseldank of his full support of any movement opposed to anti-Semitism, which he recognized to be a growing danger in many Catholic countries and added that it was against Catholic principles to persecute the Jews who were a godly people although the upper intellectual elements of them were too radical.

JEWISH WOMEN APPEAL TO WOMEN'S LEAGUE

The Jewish Women's League has forwarded to the Fifth Congress of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom a memorandum dealing with the growing danger of the anti-Semitic movement, and urging the Congress to take action by the creation of a special committee within the League, in order to counter the anti-Semitic international movement and to bring about the triumph of peace. It is pointed out that the international anti-Semitic movement is an accomplished fact and that the dangers of such a movement, not only to the Jews, but to the whole work of peace, is self-evident. It is suggested that the proposed committee should concentrate its activity on propaganda among young people. It further urges the establishment in every country of a local force to resist the anti-Semitic movement, and demands that the national sections be empowered to carry the resolution into effect in their own respective countries. In the German section has already been done.

THE SCHWARZBARD CASE IN PARIS

The case of the Jew who murdered Petlura, the notorious leader of the pogrom bands in Ukraine, which is now being tried in the Paris courts, is bringing forth many new incidents, some of which are quite disconcerting to the Jews of Ukraine. The attack upon the Jew, Peretz Stein, who had volunteered to testify in favour of Schwarzbard, has resulted in the arrest of three Ukrainians in Paris. Stein is expected to recover and is now convalescing in a Paris hospital. Now comes the news that in a small town in Ukraine, in the Province of Podolia, three Jews were murdered in revenge of Petlura's death. The murderers managed to escape and the Jews in that district are in mortal dread of repeated attacks by the local population. The Jews of Poland found it necessary to come out with a public statement, in which they condemn the action of Schwarzbard, declaring that the Jews had no share in the act and entirely disapprove of it.

Meanwhile the preparations for the trial go on apace. Torres, the attorney for Schwarzbard, has received many threatening letters from Ukrainians against his activity to reveal the atrocities committed by Petlura. Stephan Mizkiewitz, a grandson of the famous Polish poet, and a resident of Paris, volunteered to testify in behalf of Schwarzbard and to prove Petlura's participation in the many pogroms that were carried out in Ukraine, by which tens of thousands of Jewish lives were destroyed. Another prominent Pole, who represented the Danish Red Cross, also offered to present documents showing that Petlura issued the order for a pogrom on the Jews in Poraskurov.

Nestor Makhno, another Cossack leader, whose name has been connected with the atrocities, issued an open letter "To the Jews," in which he challenges the Jews to produce evidence that he had been in any way connected with the outrages.

At a special conference held in London for the purpose of re-organizing the Committee of Jewish Delegations, Dr. Leo Motzkin, the secretary, related what the committee had done in relation to the Schwarzbard case, in collecting documentary material for the council of defence. These documents are being collected in Berlin and will present some startling revelations of the happenings during those tragic years, when the Jews of Ukraine were exposed to the mercies of the brutal Cossack bands that infested the country, in their fight against the Bolshevik regime. This is done not so much as of bringing out the facts which have for the sake of clearing Schwarzbard thus far been buried in various archives. The attempts made in various places to raise funds for Schwarzbard have been checked by the declaration made by Mrs. Schwarzbard that she was not in need of any financial aid and that she would rather work and support herself and her family than become the object of charity. The Jewish veterans of the wars of the Republic, at their fifth annual convention held in this city, adopted resolutions offering any aid possible to the committee that is in charge of gathering the material for the defence, at the same time also tendering financial aid, if that should be required.

Petlura's widow also brought a civil suit against Schwarzbard for damages suffered by her as a result of the murder of her husband. The civil case will probably wait on the results of the criminal action, which will probably not be tried before the fall.

ACTIONS COMMITTEE ACCEPTS BUDGET FOR COMING YEAR

The Zionist Actions Committee, which concluded its session in London, adopted a budget for Palestine work during the coming year of approximately three million dollars. The largest item is one for colonization, about three-quarters of a million, and among the other items are those for education, health and sanitation, Hadassah work, immigration and other items. It was also decided to move the national office of the Keren Hayesod from London to Jerusalem, and to establish in Palestine an industrial bank, for which the sum of 18,000 pounds was appropriated.

The committee also appointed the members of the Board of Directors of the Hebrew University, including Nahum Sokolow, Herbert Samuel, H. N. Bialik, Dr. Boodetsky, Norman Bentwich, Dr. Eder, Shmaryahu Levin, Dr. Arthur Ruppin, Feliz Warburg, Julian Mack, Walter Mayer, Rogers Straus, Dr. S. Ratnoff, Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Dr. Cyrus Adler, Judge Irving Lehman, Professor Albert Freud, Dr. H. H. Hertz, Professor Albert Einstein, Dr. H. Weizmann and Dr. J. L. Magnus.

Among the resolutions adopted there was one in which the Mandate Power is criticised for not having fulfilled as yet the promise to regulate the matter of the local government of Palestinian towns, and that it is placing unnecessary hardships in the way of those who wish to become naturalized citizens of Palestine. It was urged that the British Government take up a policy of active participation in the upbuilding of Palestine, in harmony with the mandate.

Jewish immigration into Palestine for the past eight months was about the same as in the corresponding period last year. The total number for that period was 18,077.

Much dissatisfaction was caused among the Jews of Palestine when it was announced that the administration abandoned the plan to build a harbour in Haifa, and that instead the harbour will be built in Port Fuad, in the district of El Arish. The Hebrew press came out with strong protests against this change of policy, pointing out that this would be injurious to both the Jews and the Arabs of Palestine. The project to extend the harbour of Haifa has been spoken of for several years, and only recently, when the loan of twenty-two and a half million dollars was discussed in Parliament, it was distinctly mentioned that part of that money will be used for the Haifa harbour.

Mrs. Herman Krupnick, of Mt. Holly, N.J., has been re-elected Republican County Committee Woman of the district in Burlington County in which she lives.

ZIONIST LABOUR PARTY ASKS ACTIONS' COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ZIONIST SITUATION IN UNITED STATES

The Zionist Labour Party, Zeire Zion Hitachduth, in a congratulatory cable to the Actions, Committee of the World Zionist Organization, which has just completed its session in London, requested that a special delegation be sent to America to investigate the Zionist situation in this country. Explaining their request, the Zeire Zion declare that Zionism in America has ceased to be a local matter since the progress of future work in Palestine is closely connected with the development of Zionism in America. The Zeire Zion would also like the same delegation to investigate the situation with reference to the Jewish agency.

AHAD HAAM AT SEVENTY

The seventieth birthday anniversary of the great Hebrew writer and philosopher, Asher Ginzberg, better known by his pen-name of "Ahad Haam," was celebrated last week in many centres of Jewish life. In Tel Aviv, several meetings were held in honour of the occasion and the freedom of the city was given to the celebrant. A meeting was also held in London in honour of the bration. Several prominent Zionists who attended the meeting of the Actions' Committee in London, addressed the meeting and an official message of congratulation was sent to the celebrant by the Actions' Committee.

An amendment to the ordinance passed by the Newark, N.J., City Commission July 20, prohibiting the operating of retail meat markets on Sunday was proposed at the commission meeting in the City Hall. The amendment would exempt kosher butchers from the penalties of the ordinance, which they pointed out, would work a hardship upon them.

"As Old as Ephraim"

By E. M. Epstein

"Those trees," said the man at M—— Farm, "were planted three years and two and a half months ago."

"Humph," the city clerk grunted, as he glanced at the saplings, just about his own height. "How d'ye guess their age?"

"I don't guess: they're as old as my boy to a day." The farmer fell into a reminiscent mood; usually of few words, somewhat dour, as though he held secrets that he could neither forget nor confide, he unloosed those thoughts that ever seemed to demand expression and never turned into speech. They sat down on the rising knoll to the south of the pre-war stone dormitory, and with a cigarette between his fingers the countryman began his story:—

"I was one of the first of the group to marry. Most of the others thought it a foolhardy proceeding then. We were working on the swamp—the only Jewish settlement then in the whole valley—and who knew whether we would make good on this spot or not? A few girls were with us, just to look after the kitchen, because there was no woman's work to do on that drainage job. The winter was bad enough, with the soil turned by the rain into soft clay, into which you sank every time the spade went it. But the summer was worse. We were half way through with the work, and the mosquitoes seemed to increase the more we destroyed their breeding nests. The dank grasses, the putrid stream which we had to dry spread fever throughout the camp. I stood it long enough, stripped to the waist in the hot sun, with heavy waterman's boots, because the water was still ankle deep. We dug a new canal, deepened the old one, and prayed the land sloped sufficiently to carry off the stagnant water (for we had no surveying instruments in those days). At last the malaria caught me, and badly. We were in tents, and I must have been a mighty nuisance to the others, for I tossed about and chafed, restless as anyone accustomed always to physical labour."

He lit the second cigarette, which his friend offered. "You know I can't bear to be put out of action. This life won't allow you to meditate much. The movement is too big, the issue so tremendous, we can't think about it any more. It's the daily routine that claims us now—not the flaming ideal of those years."

"But you recovered from the malarial attack? There is no sickness now," said the visitor, who wanted to hear more about "those days." "Yes, thanks to Shoshanna. She nursed me day and night. Ishould neverhave pulled through but for her. I remember her sitting on the stool in the evening when my temperature would rise and I was sore against the whole world. A candle flickered, by which she tried to read. I think it was from the moment I knew I would ask her to marry me that I began to recover. After a week or two of convalescence I was out again in the field. Soon after I rejoined the gang and then we were married at Haifa.

"The swamp was beginning to yield, at least so it seemed to me. You see, where the land dips it drops to a wadi and the water could accumulate there because it has no outlet. Our job was to cut a ditch across until we reached lower ground. Finally, the water began to trickle. We kept clearing the bog of the tall grass—higher up the stream had been diverted—and gradually the water dried up. Then we knew we could tackle the last stage—planting eucalyptus trees to complete the drainage process, because they absorb the moisture that is left in the soil.

"The shoots arrived from the nursery of the National Fund on the same day that my boy was born, and so we had a double celebration. This grove was the first planted on the bank of the wadi. Everyone wished the boy and the trees a rapid and healthy growth. I'm not superstitious, but I worked with extra care on those shoots. For not every seed sown fructifies and not every seedling matures. I often wondered whether Ephraim would bear the climate well—because malaria disappears slowly, but we were resolved not to leave the place. And as the trees began to sprout and grow, taking root in the damp soil, the baby grew likewise. They've both come on well.

"And that's why I know the exact age of this grove of eucalyptus," he concluded, rising as though he had already spoken too long to the sleek townsman who had never seen a tree planted in his life.—Zionist Record.

GREATER ACTIONS COMMITTEE IN SESSION

The sessions of the Greater Actions Committee of the World Zionist organization, which were held recently in London, had under consideration a number of vital questions affecting the future of the Palestine rehabilitation. Although the sessions were closed to the press, sufficient material was made public to indicate the character of the meeting. The Actions Committee is the supreme body of the Zionist organization during the period intervening the congresses.

Dr. Weitzmann's report contained a survey of his experiences during his recent visits in Palestine and at Geneva, where the Mandates Commission held its sessions. He made it clear that the possibilities of enlarging the area of Jewish settlements in Palestine are much greater now than ever before. Outside of the plan to establish large settlements in Transjordania there comes the offer of the French Government to open large tracts of land in Syria for Jewish settlements. The Actions' Committee would have to ratify this new plan of extending Jewish colonization work beyond the frontiers of Palestine.

Dr. Stephen S. Wise pointed to the debate in the House of Commons on the Palestine loan as an indication of the favourable change of attitude on the part of the British public toward Jewish work in Palestine. "It is significant," he said, "that during the Wednesday debate in the House of Commons on the Palestine Government loan not a single unfriendly word was uttered against Zionism. American Zionists will make the greatest effort during the coming year for the rebuilding of Palestine and they will also stand loyally for the realization of the Jewish Agency plan." Bialik also urged that a definite plan be drawn up for Zionist work in America, which is now still conducted on an objectionable philanthropic basis.

Dr. Leo Motzkin, chairman of the Actions Committee, presided at the meeting and the committee was nearly in full attendance. The Polish delegates arrived a little late, because of the change of government in Poland which required the presence of several of them in Warsaw. The absence of Nahum Sokolow was noticeable. Mr. Sokolow has not yet returned from his South African trip where he conducted a successful campaign in behalf of the Keren Hayesod.

Do Trees Have Souls?

By ZAHAVA

"Do trees have souls?" a little boy asked his mother, as she brought him into the cool shadows of a eucalyptus wood out of the white-hot glare of a midsummer noon in Palestine.

"What makes you think they might have?" she questioned him in turn.

"Because they are everybody's friends. They let the wind play little songs on their branches, and swish through their tops. And look at all the room they give the birds for nests. And—and—they make shady places for us to play in." He answered slowly, almost stopping between each word, thinking his way as he spoke.

"I don't know whether trees have souls. In olden times people thought so. But it is true that they are good friends, especially to us here in Palestine. Can you imagine how this place would be without them?"

"But they were always here, weren't they, Immah?"

"No, indeed. These trees here were planted only four years ago, so you see they are younger than you are. Your father helped to set out this wood. The trees were tiny saplings then, and we measured you against one of them."

"Who was bigger?"

"Both even then."

Isaak was pleased to think that once upon a time these slender giants had been no taller than he. "See where I come to now, mother," he bragged, as he leaned against a greyish-brown trunk that shot up straight as a telegraph pole.

"Next year, when I'm big, I'll climb to the top."

"Wouldn't you like, when you are really big, to plant more trees, so that all these bare hills will be covered?"

"Oh, of course, I'll work when I'm big. But tell me why there weren't any trees before I was born."

"Before I myself was born there were hardly any trees in all of Palestine. The story of the trees here is really the story of the coming of the Jews to Palestine. And that only goes back to the time when your grandfather was a young man."

That period seemed remote antiquity to Issak, but he waited politely.

"In very, very old times, when this country was a Jewish kingdom, the trees reached up to the very tops of the mountains. There were cedar and oak and cypress, and grapes, and figs and dates and olives and pomegranates, and all sorts of good things that grow on trees. But then, you know, after the Jews were driven out, there were people here who cut down a tree every time they needed a bit of wood for cooking, and who never thought of planting one. And, of course, when there was fighting, the soldiers chopped away trees for all sorts of reasons. So, by the time we came here there weren't many left, and we had to begin all over again."

"Take this spot, for instance. Five years ago this little brook that runs along between its banks so quietly had no channel. So it flowed wherever it could, and ran over the ground so that you couldn't set down foot anywhere. Swarms of mosquitoes used to dance up and down over these wet places, swamps, you know. And when these mosquitoes bit a person, he got chills and fever—headache! And with all the water soaked into the ground, you couldn't find any fit to drink."

"But now we can drink it."

"Yes, and even without boiling it, as they have to in Jerusalem for fear of getting sick."

"Who put the trees here? And how could they get in to plant them if it was so swampy?"

"The men of our Kevutzah did it all. First they made a path for the water to run in and laid pipes to draw it off to places where it was needed. And then they brought the little eucalyptus saplings here, and set them into the swamp because their roots would reach down deep very soon and drink up all the water."

"And now they are tall as giants."

"They will be taller still, like those we saw in the grove at Mikveh Israel. And by the time they are ten years old, it will be possible to cut down some of them for lumber. That means that they will be used for doors and windows and tables and chairs and desks and heaps of other things."

"And won't there be any more woods?"

"Yes, indeed, because we shall go on planting and planting until there are plenty of trees for shade and for lumber and for food. By the time you grow up, all the little fruit trees that now are no taller than you will be giving us cherries and apples and pears and plums and peaches."

"Yum-yum!" Issak patted his stomach at the thought of all the fruit one could eat. Now many weeks might pass with nothing better than stewed prunes or raisins.

"You must know, son, that it isn't only we Jews in Palestine who are interested in planting trees here. But the Jews in Hutz la-Aretz—in America and England and Russia and Brazil and Australia—help us by sending us money to pay for the trees. Next week, for instance, on Herzl Day they will come together wherever they happen to be, and they will talk talk about Herzl, and make gifts of money so that we can plant trees in honour of his memory."

"Who was Herzl, Immah?"

"A great Jewish hero, son, who died for Palestine. He dreamed of seeing the Jewish people in Palestine before he ever saw the land. And when he came here, he planted a cedar tree at Moza; that was the nearest Jewish village to Jerusalem then. After he died, twenty-two years ago, Jews all over the world observed his death anniversary on the twentieth day of Tamuz. And when they planned to do him honour on that day, they could think of nothing that would have pleased him more than to plant thousands of trees in Jewish villages. Now there are almost 400,000 trees in Palestine that the Jewish National Fund has had planted with the gifts of the Jews in Herzl's memory. Each of them is a guard of honour for the soul of Herzl. And that's enough, my son, not only for a tree, but for a man. For the man you will be, I hope."

"Immah, I want to plant a tree on Herzl day."

"Very well, son. We'll walk over to the plantation on that day, and I'm sure they'll show you what to do."

"But the children outside of Palestine, Immah? What will they do?"

"They will put their pennies together and pay for the trees the children here will plant. And then some day they'll come out and see the woods that they and we together gave to Palestine."

Physicians expressed the hope that Peretz Stein, the Ukrainian Jew, who was to appear as a witness in the Schwarzbard case and who was shot by unknown persons, might become well again, after two bullets have been extracted from his body.

James de Rothschild entertained to luncheon the King and Queen of England and their daughter, Princess Mary and Viscount Lascelles. The luncheon was given at Waddesdom Manor, the Rothschild country house.

It was made public in Budapest that the Hungarian Government will not be able to fulfill the promise made by Count Klebelsberg to the Council of the League of Nations that the Numerus Clausus would be abolished in the fall. It was declared that the government will not be in a position to carry out the promise at present.

Every Friday

Recently members of the Bnai Brith Lodge journeyed to the Jewish Boys' Camp at Keswick, Ontario, and provided treats for the boys with a programme of sports and prizes. This was done with the best of intentions and the boys must have enjoyed it, but there is room for objection to the amount of ceremony attached by the grown-ups to the giving of a simple treat to poor boys. Children of the well-to-do are accustomed to taking such things for granted and very little thank-you is expected of them. It remains for the heart of the poor to well up and spill over into enough gratitude to make the patrons feel the day well spent. The poor boy must behave not naturally like any other child at a party, but like a "little gentleman" at a lodge meeting. So in the best tradition of the bar-mitzvah speech into the mouth of nine-year-old Jack Vanderhaut are placed the following pompous and eloquent words on behalf of the boys:

"Our honoured guests: It is my privilege to extend to you all the greetings and welcome of honoured chief, councillors, leaders and boys of this Camp. We recognize with gratitude the zealous interest and philanthropic activities of the Independent Order of Bnai Brith for our welfare. We are taught, however, not to look on your generosity as gifts, but as loans, which we are expected to repay at such times as we are able by following your example in the magnificent work done by your order. We are informed that the motto of your order is 'Harmony, Brotherly Love and Benevolence.' Your organization is founded on the divine command, 'And thou shalt do that which is good and right in the sight of the Lord,' which surely included harmony, brotherly love and benevolence.

"Our organization has two branches, the Wanderers and the Men of David. The first we are taught to look at as a primary school, the second as a high school from which we are preparing ourselves not only to better qualify for the great struggle of life and to be better citizens and better Jews, but from which we may hope to graduate into that great university of philanthropic endeavour that has done so much for us. In this we believe we are doing that which is good and right in the sight of the Lord. Dear guests, on behalf of this camp, I welcome you."

Could anything be sillier?

Have you a little Girl Guide in your home? If you have there is some one around the place who, according to the code, is expected to do her duty to God and King; to help others at all times; to obey the Guide laws. The Guide laws: a Guide's honour is to be trusted, a Guide is loyal, thrifty, courteous, a friend to animals, she obeys orders, she is pure in thought, word and deed and she smiles and sings under all difficulties. That's all, but perhaps the list would be longer and more would be expected of the Girl Guide if grown-ups could only be a little more inventive. Is it to be assumed that somewhere in the world there is a smug superhuman who furnishes an example to the Girl Guides in living up to the laws and smiling and singing under all difficulties?

News item: The Jewish Children's Home is open and in occupancy as usual and friends of the Home are requested not to forget the children this summer.

Parisian hotels are adopting a new way of paging guests which it is hoped hotels in this country will have nothing to do with. The page boys hang a placard about their necks showing the numbers of the guests' rooms and ring a little bell as they go about seeking the persons wanted. In some hotels there is no more scurrying around with page boys crying, "Call for Mr. Rosenbaum." The idea is to be sedate and keep from introducing to a curious world the man who is being called. Thus one by one the once-in-a-lifetime thrills go down to oblivion. Page boys with placards, dumbly tinkling little bells, spell repression and unaccustomed, obtrusive quiet. But bell-hops with their arrogant heads up, running around and calling out names of people from far places make for life and colour. They are part of what staying at a hotel means, especially to people who don't go often. If hotels are going to be as monotonous as boarding houses, why go to hotels? Does the delegate from Vancouver journey clear to Montreal just for the convention? No, the buzz and hum of the headquarters hotel is cosmopolitan experience in his life. He is a citizen of the world. A busy boy is running around calling for him and he enjoys a lull of importance. Only a crass person of low, unromantic feeling could have thought up any other way of paging a man whether the call is necessary or not!

The Silver Ring

By GABRIEL COSTA

A Ghetto Story

Somewhere, I think, amid the sage and curiously worldly stores of the Talmud, there lie some biting dicta on the evils of hoarding, of money-grubbing for the pleasure of listening to its chink. We, to whom hard cash was something of a luxury, had naturally come to regard the matter from a Talmudic point of view, but I fear that we were rather less concerned with the moral of the actual hoarding than with the meanness of keeping negotiable riches from circulation.

That reason alone was sufficient to earn for old Simche Joseph our most cordial disapproval. Whether the Ghetto grocer knew of our attitude, suspected it, or cared, is hard enough to say. For our part, we regarded him as a misanthrope, pure and simple, "a hard nut to crack"—hard as the dried chestnuts that come from Holland, but certainly not as sweet—and as embodying within his personality all the unwelcome attributes of the elderly genus male.

This antipathy had its genesis from our almost babyhood, when the mere threat of taking us to old Simche was sufficient to subdue the noisiest amongst us and cause a general drying of petulant tears. It seemed to us then, and the thought steadily persisted in after years, that our policy of antagonism was abundantly justified.

Not that Simche Joseph was unjust. Not that he gave short measure, or piled up profits by artistic processes of adulteration. On the contrary, he was conscientious to a fault. He simply hoarded his wealth and gave away not the veriest cheese rind. That, at least, was the popular opinion, and that accounted for the sour looks—sour as his newly pickled cucumbers,—with which we favoured Simche Joseph on Sabbath afternoons.

Never a smile lit up his countenance. Pre-occupation was perched there, a permanent guest, and it seemed hard on this blessed day of heaven-sent tranquility, a day of freedom from the cares of things mundane, that the grocer should yet be mentally computing the profits attendant upon his sales. Hard and unpromising was the old bachelor's exterior; so very hard, so decidedly unpromising, that we vowed he'd have made profit out of his poor old grandmother, did she not lie under the cypress in the old Beth Haim.

He lived for his money, we averred most brazenly, and woe betide his debtor. Had he no greater object in life than this? Would he continue to hoard and hoard until the Great Reaper called for him? And what of his wealth, then? For whom was it destined?

You see how badly we must have thought of him, Simche the grocer; how persistently for years we must have misunderstood him. And now I set down this narrative to unburden my heart; to paint old Simche in colours that are true; to tear aside the veil that hid his vain humanity from the world, a world that had grievously misjudged him.

None other knew his story. None but I had penetrated beyond the outer walls of his habitual reserve; none but I had drawn him out, got him to speak of his heart instead of his herrings, delved to the roots of his humanity and found his heart beat warm and true, an organ that pulsated with compassion and pity. We regarded him as mean, a skinflint. But neither you nor I will ever know the good he has done in trembling and in stealth. None of us did ever dream that "A Kieff Jew," whose name figured in the communal subscription lists time and again, was none other than our Simche. Not that he owned to it, and to scores of other benefactions, large and small. A little private inquiry resulted in abundant verification. And as for his story. Why, you will ask, did he show a preference for a lonely, unloved bachelorhood?

It was the old, old tale of unrequited affection; of romance trampled upon by a materialistic parental foot.

A poor youth from troubled Kieff chafing at the restrictions of his native city, Simche decided to find affluence and freedom in the great world outside. Others had cast off the Russian yoke and started life afresh with little capital and hope unlimited. Why not he? But—and it was a pregnant but—what of his Rivka, the blossoming child who had promised to be his bride in the years-to-be? What would she say? And her parents?

Simche would at least make sure of her before he departed, for none but she could insure his happiness; none but she would share his poverty—if poverty it was to be—without a pang. Youth in love rises superior to discomforts such as these; regards a meal of bread and cheese as ambrosia; builds its castles on the airiest foundations. Simche walked assuringly to the home of his beloved dreaming bright dreams of riches in store, of fields of industry yet unexploited. He would be a very Napoleon of commerce; would stand at the head of a great industrial army; discover fame and riches at a bound. The poor Russian youth sought solace in his dream. Precious little substance found he at the home of his Rivka!

"What madness is this?" inquired her father, his youth quivering in very indignation. Why could he not remain content with Kieff? Who was it that had put ideas into his head? The lad replied, with a firmness that surprised him, that Kieff has precious little to offer an ambitious youth; that in the bustling world beyond the Russian boundaries there was wealth for the man of initiative and energy. Besides, he added, with all the airy assurance of youth, the very thought that Rivka would wait for him, would spur his efforts a hundredfold.

"What a splendid builder—of air castles," remarked the old man to his spouse. Rivka, in the kitchen beyond, reddened with indignation. Little snatches of conversation reached her ears now and then. She buried her tear-stained face in her apron. Simche departed. The sunlit street seemed curiously gray. His light heart had grown heavy. They would not listen to him. Rivka would make a better match than ever he could offer. Besides, said they, what was there to guarantee that, with Simche once in the great world beyond, their child, waiting patiently and hopefully in fast-fading youth, might not be supplanted by another?

Thus had they argued, Rivka's parents. And when he had left, and passed along the high road as in a troubled dream there grew up in his heart the determination to come back and win her when fortune had smiled—and not before. . . .

There are some who scoff at the sincerity of "first loves"; some, of that curiously unstable temperament who cannot associate devotion and constancy with matters such as these. Perhaps Simche was an exception. Perhaps the thought of the miles that sundered them, served to invest Rivka as with a nimbus, to impart an edge to his silent adoration.

Neither you nor I will ever know the full story of his endeavours; of the incidents attendant upon his arrival the great, cold city, shoeless but hopeful; of bitter servitude at starvation wage, and, finally, of the gradual and toilsome mounting of the ladder that carried him high above the reach of penury and despair. . . . And now, now with a home to offer his Rivka—whose silence had puzzled him, struck him to the heart—he might turn once again to Kieff, claim the bride that should be his.

But Rivka had not waited. Even whilst he had been bending over the presser's board, venting his youthful impatience on the steaming garments, Rivka's parents had betrothed her to a prosperous young tradesman, who had found the world of Kieff sufficiently large for his business plan of campaign. Rivka had but to obey.

All this happened long years ago. The bitterness of Simche's experience had been largely healed by the soothing balm of time; blind fury had made way for gentler, sadder thoughts. But outwardly the grocer was a misanthrope still.

His story, the gall and wormwood that had eaten its way into his life, impressed me to a greater extent than I can ever describe. But in the amazing denouement of his shattered romance I discern one of my most cherished memories. . . .

If that were possible, old Simche was gloomier than ever. His shop was full, but seeing that he disdained anything in the way of assistance, his clients either possessed their souls in patience or made their way elsewhere. Invariably they elected to stay—usage was too strong for them.

On the edge of the crowd, and purposely remaining behind, a frail young woman, a bonny infant in her arms, had been waiting ever so patiently. At length came her turn.

"Well," inquired Simche, with a gruffness that was usual with him, "and what's for you?"

The girl gave her order, with the pendant warning that it would not be possible to settle up for some days. Husband was searching for work that was tardy in coming; their little all paid the rent; surely, Simche wouldn't mind? Simche, however, did mind; but his conscience smote him as he turned away.

All that morning he had weighed up his attitude toward this poor sister-in-faith; he had wondered whether, after all, he had not been just a little precipitate. And he prayed that she might return.

Some passing angel must have heard his prayer, for the girl came back once again.

"Look here, Simche," she pleaded, "I have brought a few odds and ends as security until I can repay you. These things are as dear to me as my blessed child, for they remind me of my mother."

Simche's face began to soften. He would not trust himself to look at the few poor tawdry trinkets. "Take them away," he commanded, "It'll be all right; don't worry." Then, amid the little heap of odds and ends he espied a ring that seemed curiously familiar. A little silver circlet, almost valueless, and worn to a thinness most surprising.

"This?" repeated the girl, "it was given to my mother long ago. It came from Kieff; from a young fellow whom she might have married—had she waited."

"It's an old story," added the girl, "and my mother—dead these many years—often wondered what had become of 'her little Simche.' Strange that your name's Simche, too!"

The years rolled back, and out of the past there surged a mighty flood of memories. This silver ring. Ah! It had opened up a romance that might have been. And this girl was—her daughter!

Well, she certainly should never want. And to think he had almost refused to help her! . . . A new gladness had entered into Simche's life. The light of happiness beams from his eyes, his walk is firm and elastic; no longer is preoccupation even a temporary guest.

The bitterness of his life is banished for all time, for, with Rivka's grandchild, the bonniest lassie in all the Ghetto, his rosiest hours pass happily away.

Like a fragrant breath from the buried past is this gladsome, laughing child. She is all in all to the grocer of the Ghetto. For she has Rivka's eyes.—Jewish Guardian.

LON CHANEY IN "THE PENALTY" AT LOEW'S

The world's wonder hero of the screen—the man who exceeds each past performance with a greater sensation—that's Lon Chaney, the man who has faced starvation and is now a household hero.

The great dramatic star will be seen at Loew's next week in his latest screen masterpiece, "The Penalty," and it is with very great pride that the management announces this marvellous picture of San Francisco life.

"The Penalty" was not intended for release until midwinter. It is a film scoop of no mean proportions that Loew's has achieved.

See this wonder feature next week, and also our very excellent vaudeville programme, boasting five big variety acts.

TORONTO'S TALMUD TORAH

By M. Frank, Assistant Principal

The aim of the Talmud Torah, like that of all modern Hebrew schools, is to impart to Jewish children Jewish culture in the Hebrew language. It strives to familiarize the pupils first of all with the language itself and then, using Hebrew as the medium of instruction, to give them a knowledge of the bible, Jewish history, the Jewish ritual, Hebrew literature, and the Talmud. It endeavours to promote in the pupils the spirit of the Jewish religion and Jewish ethics and a desire to participate in the perpetuation of Judaism and the renaissance of the Jewish people.

From the first day that the children gather in their classroom at the Talmud Torah, they begin to live in the atmosphere of the Hebrew language. The teacher greets them in Hebrew, tells them to rise, to sit, to walk, to run in Hebrew. No other language is heard in the room. The pupils themselves soon learn to address their teacher in Hebrew, using the few necessary phrases which they acquired. Objects are pointed out and the children refer to them in Hebrew; motions, actions, are performed, sometimes in the form of a little pantomime, and are described in Hebrew.

The novelty and the element of play in the situation arouse the little ones' curiosity and interest, and under a capable teacher, they enjoy their Hebrew lesson, and develop an affection for the language. Songs, ditties, stories, games, dialogues and little sketches are introduced to make the study attractive. No formal grammar is taught during the first year of study, but the children acquire the habit of speaking Hebrew correctly and fluently through carefully directed practice, and are trained to think in Hebrew. At the end of the first year the average child will know enough Hebrew to enjoy a bible story or a story from Jewish history. Six months later he begins the study of the bible in its original language and from then on the bible takes up most of his time of study. The method described is known as the "direct" or "conversational" method of teaching languages. As applied to the teaching of Hebrew, it is known as "Ivrith-be-Ivrith" (Hebrew by Hebrew).

In matters of administration, the school largely follows the pattern of the public schools. The "direct" method of teaching Hebrew (Ivrith-be-Ivrith) as evolved by the leading Hebrew schools represents the best in the field of teaching languages.
